The city of Watchtower has stood for more than four hundred years, the last sign of civilisation zin a world destroyed by a deadly plague. When the disease came and plants and animals began to die, people retreated behind their high metal walls to wait. When they could not find a cure, and the water began to dry up, people built themselves metal bodies that would never grow sick and die. When the world was dead and poisoned and some realised tvhat even a cure would not save them, they began to build, and didn't stop.

ATTO

Atto was only eight years old when he was encased in a mechanical body to wait out the spread of the great plague. He has no memories of his parents and the time before, but he does have an uncanny knack for fixing things and his beautiful watch, which has kept perfect time through the centuries.

Milli

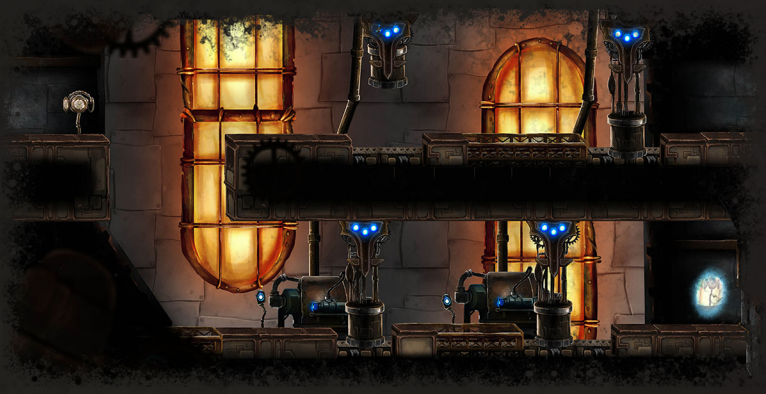

Milli is a mechanical master-piece and as much a mystery to Atto as herself. She has no idea who made her, where she got her amazing powers , and why she has waited till now to wake up. She only knows she has a greater purpose that she needs Atto to help her fulfil.

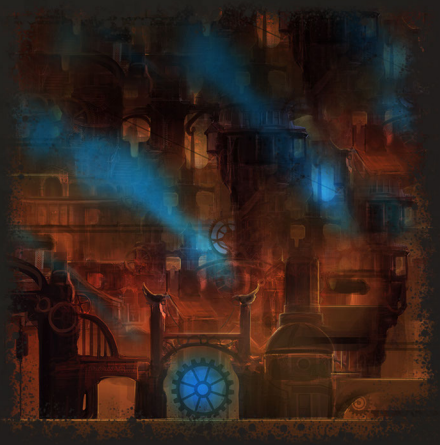

Grindtown

The industrial heart of the city. The plants and factories and workshops that power Watchtower are so old and numerous and complicated that nobody knows what they do anymore. All anybody in Grindtown knows is, they need enough workers and shifts to run them around the clock.

Poisonville

The lowest and olderst part of the city, beneath the factory floor. As well as lingering contagions from the time of the plauge, all the waste and pollution of Watchtower flow down through pipes to discharge here. Only the desperate and dangerous live in

Crystal Heights

The scientific and cultural centre of the city, populated by scientists, inventors and tinkerers who work tirelessly to produce new machines that improve life in Watchtower. Sadly the only lives that ever seem to improve are those of the aristocrats who control the district.
